

While Working from Home, US Adults Rely on Email and Video Conferencing

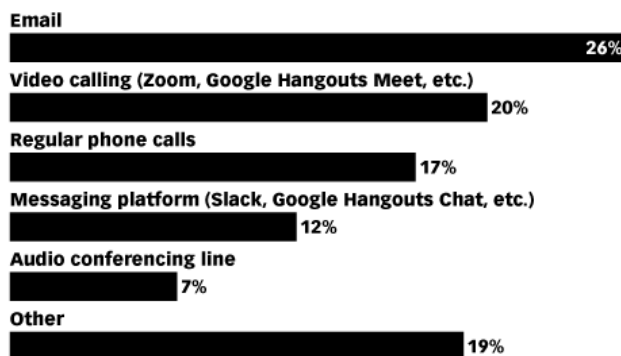

ARTICLE |

Rimma Kats

The coronavirus pandemic is changing the way US adults communicate, as they shelter in place and work from home. For the most part, US adults are relying on email to correspond with coworkers during the outbreak, according to a recent survey from CivicScience.

How Are US Adults Primarily Communicating with Coworkers While Working from Home During the Coronavirus Outbreak?

% of respondents, March 2020

Note: n=1,261 ages 18+; among respondents who are working from home; numbers may not add up to 100% due to rounding
Source: CivicScience as cited in company blog, March 31, 2020

254321

www.eMarketer.com

Video calling, through apps like Zoom and Google Hangouts, was just as popular, with one in five respondents saying they are using it. Traditional audio-conferencing, however, was less common, with just 7% of US adults saying they are using it during the outbreak.

Read More:

- How COVID-19 Is Fast-Tracking Emerging Tech
- Working and Studying from Home Shines a Light on Digital Usage
- How Companies Can Set Employees Up for Success When Working from Home

eMarketer and Business Insider Intelligence have joined forces to become the leading research company focused on digital transformation. For more insights and key statistics on the biggest trends in today's most disruptive industries, subscribe to Chart of the Day.